-ster, suffix, repr. a WGer. type -strjōn-, forming fem. agent-nouns, prob. a deriv. of the OTeut. -stro- forming nouns of action, as in ON. bakstr act of baking.

In OE. -estre was freely used to form fem. agent-nouns, usu. by being appended to the pres.-stems of verbs. The few instances in which it is used as a masc. are renderings of the Latin designations of men exercising functions which among the English were peculiar to women, as byrdistre embroiderer (gl. blactarius), bæcestre baker (gl. pistor), sēamestre tailor (gl. sartor).

In the south the suffix continued to be predominantly feminine throughout the ME. period, while in the north it came very early to be used, indiscriminately with -ER¹, as an agential ending irrespective of gender; from the 16th c. onwards the older words in -ster, so far as they have survived, have been regarded as masculines, in several instances giving rise to feminines in -ess, as seamstress, songstress, huckstress, etc. In the modern English period the suffix has been freely used, but it is doubtful whether any of the new formations are really derived from verbs; they are usually associated rather with sbs. than with vbs.

IV. A mode of expressing dates. Chiefly, Either of the two methods of dating that have been current in the Christian world since the introduction of the Gregorian calendar in 1582: viz., the New Style (abbrev. N.S.), which is the result of the Gregorian reform, and the Old Style (O.S.) which follows the unreformed calendar. The New Style is occas. called the Roman Style, and the Old Style the English Style. In historical dates earlier than 1582, however, Roman Style, as used by modern writers, means only that the year mentioned is to be understood as beginning on 1 January. 1590.
The Julian calendar assumed that the tropical year consisted of 365¼ days. To give the average calendar year this length, it was provided that the normal year should contain 365 days, but every fourth year 366 days. In England the beginning of the legal year was 25 March.
The Julian estimate of 365¼ days for the length of the year was too great by about 11 minutes, an error which amounts to one day in about 128 years. Hence in 1581 the date of 21 March for the vernal equinox, assumed since the early 4th c. in the rule for computing Easter, was 10 days too late. To remedy this, Pope Gregory XIII ordained that in A.D. 1582 the day after 4 Oct. should be reckoned as 15 Oct., and that in future the years which had a number ending in two cyphers should not be leap years unless the number were divisible by 400. The Julian date for the beginning of the year, viz., 1 Jan., was retained.
In England and Scotland the Gregorian calendar was established by the Act 24 Geo. II. c. 23 (1751), which provided that the year 1752 and all future years should begin on 1 Jan. instead of 25 Mar., that the day after 2 Sep. 1752 should be reckoned the 14 Sep., and that the reformed rule for leap year should in future be followed.

Sub- (sǝb, sǝb) prefix, repr. L. sub- = the prep. sub under, close to, up to, towards, used in composition with various meanings.

The b of L. sub- remained unchanged when it preceded a radical beginning with s, t, or v, before m and r it was frequently assimilated (see e.g. SUMMON, SURROGATE), and before c, f, g, and p it was almost invariably assimilated (see e.g. SUCCEED, SUFFER, SUGGEST, SUPPOSE). A by-form subs- was normally reduced to sus- in certain compounds with words having initial c, p, t (see SUSCEPTION, SUSPEND, SUSTAIN); and before sp- the prefix becomes su- (see SUSPECT, SUSPICION).

The original force of the prefix is either entirely lost sight of or to a great extent obscured in many words derived from old L. compounds, such as subject, suborn, subscription, subserve, subsist, substance. As a living prefix in English it bears a full meaning of its own and has become capable of being prefixed to words of native English or any other origin.

T

T (tī), the twentieth letter of the English and the nineteenth of the ancient Roman alphabet, corresponding in form to the Greek T (tau) from the Phœnician (and ancient Semitic) + X X X (tau). It represents the point-breath-stop consonant of Bell's 'Visible Speech', or 'surd dental mute'; in English it is gingival or alveolar, not dental.

In mod. English, besides its proper sound as above described, t in the combinations -tion, -tious, -tial, -tia, -tian, -tience, -tient, after a vowel or any consonant except s, has the sound of sh (ʃ), in which the following i is absorbed, as in nation (nēⁱ·ʃən), factious (fæ·kʃəs), partial (pā·ɹʃăl), etc.; but in -ia, -ian, i is sometimes more or less preserved, esp. in proper names, as in inertia, Portia, etc. After s the original sound of t has remained, as in bestial, Christian.

A modern change is the development in southern England of the sound (tʃ) from t followed by [iu], [yu] in such combinations as -tual, -tuous, and esp. -ture, as in nature (nēⁱ tiŭɹ, nēⁱ tʃəɹ). In rapid speech ti after s usu. passes similarly into tʃ, as (kwe·stʃən) for (kwe·styən).

T between s and syllabic l or n (en), as in bustle, castle, epistle, christen, fasten, hasten, is now usu. mute; so between s and m in Christmas, and between f and syllabic n in often soften.

TH is a consonantal digraph representing two simple sounds (þ, ð), for which the Roman alphabet has no simple symbols, and is thus phonetically a distinct letter (or two letters) inserted between TE- and TI-.

-or, a termination of words, and form of various suffixes, of L. origin.

In AF. the sound arising from Latin ō became (u) and came c 1300 to be written ou (onour). The earliest adopted words in ME. had o or u (onor, onur), but the regular representation after 1300 was with ou (onour, honour). At the Renaissance, many of the -our words were conformed to the L. in -or; and nearly all words taken then or later from L. were spelt -or. In Great Britain -our is still written in many of the words left unchanged in the 16th c., but American usage favours -or in all.

Similar are agent-nouns formed in Fr. or AF. on the vb. stem, as purveyor, surveyor, tailor, warrior (AF. werreyour, f. werrier to war). c. Agent-nouns in -ātor, -ētor, -itor, -ītor, -ūtor, adopted in later times in Fr., or in Eng., retain t, appearing in Fr. as -ateur, -iteur, etc., and have now in Eng. the same written form as in L., e.g. administrator, creator, creditor, etc. Some of these, from OF. or AF., had formerly -our, as creatour, creditour, etc.; others of later formation, immed. from L., have had the -or form from the first. d. -or is sometimes an alteration of another suffix, as of L. -arius, F. -ier, AF. -er, in bachelor, chancellor, or of Eng. -er:—OE. -ere, in sailor. The frequent occurrence of ME. -our, mod. -or, in legal terms denoting the person acting, as opp. to the person acted upon in -é, -ee, e.g. lessor, lessee, has given it a kind of professional character; cf. suitor, sailer.
